

THE BOAR'S LAST FIELD

VISION — THE WARRIOR WHO HUNG THIS
SHIELD. YOU SEE THROUGH HIS EYES.

I carried the boar through eleven winters. My sons learned to hold a spear before they could hold a plough. The Romans said we would be partners. Then the borders moved. Then the tribute doubled. Then the army came.

They burned the village behind us so we would know what surrendering meant. My eldest is in a Roman arena now. I do not know if he is alive.

I hung this shield here so Mars would remember our name when Rome has finished forgetting it.

My name is Widukind. My sons are named Adalbert and Gerlach. I want someone to know that.

Rome calls this the Marcomannic War.

We call it what happens when you trust a treaty.

Vision ends. The shield is heavier than it was.
